

The global terrorism trend remains complicated and volatile. To combat terrorism effectively, apart from efforts of law enforcement agencies, members of the public have an equally important part to play.

The general public should possess sufficient counter-terrorism awareness and promptly report any suspicion. By contributing to promote deterrence, individuals could save their own lives and the lives of the people around them.

FOILED PLOTS

Reported by Members of the Public

There were overseas examples in which the civilians identified suspicious circumstances in daily lives, alerted the law enforcement agencies and eventually stopped terrorist attacks from taking place.

In May 2022, German police arrested a 16-year-old boy in Essen after he disclosed to a classmate his plans of placing a bomb in his school. Police later found explosive precursors, homemade firearms and some extremist materials in the boy's home.

FOILED PLOTS

In January 2021, an IT technician of a computer repair firm in Surrey, the UK, reported that he discovered suspicious files on weapons and a detailed explosive-making guide in a 47-year-old male's computer. Upon the male's arrest and a search at his home, he was found in possession of explosive precursors and bomb-making manuals that detailed his extremist views.

In July 2017, a male was arrested under the Internal Security Act in Singapore after people close to him reported his extremist views to the authorities. On top of actively garnering support for Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) online and trying to make his way to Syria to join ISIL, the male also prepared to attack Singapore Armed Forces personnel.
